Overall information Image

1. Admissible file format: gif, jpg.
2. Detailed specification of each format is available in the specification below.

Overall information html

1. Due to its diversity, after its provision by the client, HTML5 serving code must be each time tested and approved by the Publisher. All ready-to-use advertising materials essential to launch the campaign must be delivered no later than 5 working days before their display.
2. The handbook with guidelines on the optimum ad design in HTML5 is available HERE or the official IAB website (English version).
3. The overall performance of the ad must comply with the requirements described in the technical specification for a given format. None of its elements should interfere with operations of the Publisher's website or other ads.
4. Code elements:
 - a) elements of HTML5 ad code include: the HTML file, scripting library (JavaScript), style sheet files with unique names (CSS3), graphics, and optionally, elements such as video and rich media. All elements must be submitted in the format of a compressed .zip. file;

b) all components of the code must be hosted entirely by the Partner

e.g. Doubleclick, or entirely on the Publisher's servers;

c) if the weight of the ad (including the downloaded code) exceeds the standard weight (including JavaScript library), the client shall pay the standard additional charge for exceeding the ad weight specified in the price list;

d) ads must be designed to be displayed in the RWD technology (correct performance when container/browser window sizes changes);

e) ads cannot use jQuery libraries;

f) the code must be compliant with Friendly iFrame;

g) the code must be able to support variables that count clicks in the Publisher's display systems. This may be enabled, for example, by the clickTag method;

h) in order to read parameters transferred to the ad (including click measurement scripts), please attach the following code to the beginning of the of

<body> of the ad code:

<script type="text/javascript">
var parsed = (document.location.href.split('#')[1]||'').split('&');
var params = parsed.reduce(function (params, param) {
var param = param.split('=');
params[param[0]] = decodeURIComponent(param.slice(1).join('='));
return params;
}, {});
</script>
```

The ad in the main HTML file should feature a variable to which the ad's target address may be transferred. Assigned to this variable should be the value read from the parameters transferred automatically to the ad which is located in the variable params.clickTag (after executing the parameter-reading code). Presented below is an example where the target address should be assigned to the global variable clickTag:

<script>
...
//place the address of the landing page in the variable clickTag, e.g.:
//clickTag='https://www.gemius.pl';
clickTag=params.clickTag; //transfers the value read from the parameters
...
</script>

5. HTML5 copies are incompatible with Internet Explorer browser version 8 and earlier versions. Ad display in these browsers will be deactivated.
6. The Publisher does not provide data related to user's interaction within a HTML5 ad. Such functionality should be ensured by the ad's code.
7. First loading time of the ad is the universal point for measuring ad display.

8. In case of drop-down ads containing a video or non-standard ads, the Publisher reserves the right to identify additional requirements that must be met before release.
9. Standard CPU load requirements apply to HTML5 ads:
 - a) an ad, regardless of its type, must not overload the CPU to an extent that significantly impedes functionalities of other apps on the computer. A standard computer, i.e. equipped with a single-core CPU clocked at 2 GHz, is used to determine the load on the GPU;
 - b) ads permanently present on the website (e.g. billboards, half-page - standard, drop-down, etc.) may load a standard computer at max. 30%;
 - c) ads that may be closed by the user (toplayers, etc.) may load a standard computer at max. 40%.
 - d) the permitted temporary increase in the load of a GPU of a standard computer is up to twice the value of the standard load or up to 60% of the load for advertising formats permanently present on the website and up to 80% for drop-down advertising formats, respectively, if the increase lasts 2 seconds and takes place only once during at least 10 seconds of animation.
